Such update shall include the following:

I. PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 3894, the “Collecting and Analyzing Resources Integral and Necessary for Guidance for Social Determinants Act of 2021” or the “CARING for Social Determinants Act of 2021,” ensures that state Medicaid programs have current and accurate information on how they can use Medicaid to address social determinants of health.

H.R. 3894 directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to update existing Medicaid guidance on strategies to address social determinants of health in the Medicaid program. It specifies that such guidance shall include information on provisions in Title XIX and Title XXI of the Social Security Act (SSA), as well as authorities under section 1115 of such Act that states may use to address social determinants of health. It requires that the Secretary provide guidance on how states can encourage Medicaid managed care entities to address social determinants of health. It also requires that the guidance include examples of how states are currently using such authorities to address social determinants of health.

II. BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Social determinants of health impact the quality of everyone’s life and are the primary drivers of health outcomes, along with health behaviors like smoking, diet, and exercise.^{1,2} Generally, social determinants of health are defined as the medical, economic, educational, environmental, and social conditions affecting individuals as they live and age.³ Examples of social determinants of health include income, housing, transportation, safety, literacy, language, hunger, access to clean water and nutritional food, civic engagement, and access to and quality of health care.⁴ Although these markers are important indicators of health-related risks, individual-level social determinants of health are not routinely collected or systematically used by healthcare providers to allocate resources or supports to individuals most in need.⁵

In order to address social determinant needs, states have deployed a broad array of approaches across their Medicaid programs to better support the broader needs of their Medicaid populations. For example, the State of Washington uses flexibilities in a section 1115 demonstration to partner with Federally Qualified Health Centers that administer the Health Care for the Homeless program to help provide supportive housing and supported employment opportunities for those enrolled in the program.⁶ Additionally, the State of Minnesota, through its section 1915(i) State Plan Amendment covers certain housing stabilization services for people with disabilities that either have mental illness or substance use disorders or are at risk of experiencing homelessness.⁷

Medicaid has significant flexibility to allow for state innovation and for other states to take up models that other states have demonstrated. On January 7, 2021, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) released guidance that described current flexibilities under the law and highlighted successful pilots and demonstrations that states have taken to use these flexibilities to address social determinants of health.⁸ H.R. 3894 would continue these efforts by requiring regular updates to the guidance so that states can remain up to date on the latest flexibilities and successes in supporting social determinants of health in Medicaid.
